Art Unit: 2152

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Hudetz et al., US Pat. No. 5,978,773 in view of Browning, US Pat. No. 6,081,629.

2. Hudetz discloses a method for [operating] a web browser application on a user's computer, comprising the steps of:

providing a browser application on the user's computer that is [executable] in response to predetermined browser inputs being received by the user's computer (col. 3, line 16 – col. 4, line 30 and col. 11, line 40 – col. 12, line 10);

providing a non-browser input that is not a portion of the set of predetermined browser inputs (col. 3, line 16 – col. 4, line 30);

converting the non-browser input to simulate one or more of the predetermined browser inputs as a simulated browser input (barcode data is converted to simulate a predetermined browser input, e.g. a URL input from a keyboard; col. 3, line 16 – col. 4, line 30); and [executing] the web browser on the user's computer with this simulated browser input and, in response therefore, accessing information on a network (col. 3, line 16 – col. 4, line 30 and col. 11, line 40 – col. 12, line 10).

However, Hudetz does not explicitly teach a method for “launching” (i.e. opening and not merely “executing” a browser application) a browser application. In the same field of endeavor, Browning teaches a network device which takes as input non-browser input, and in response launches a web browser in a manner analogous to user input from a keyboard (See Browning, col. 3, line 45 – col. 5 line 26 and col. 5, lines 27-67). It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have incorporated the use of non-browser inputs to launch a web browser as taught by Browning into the system of Hudetz for the purpose of automating the system to enhance the ease of use and efficiency.

3. As to claims 2 and 3, Hudetz-Browning teaches the invention substantially as claimed. Hudetz teaches providing a first portion of the non-browser input that is generated local and external to the user's computer at the user's location and providing a second portion of the non-browser input that is retrievable from a separate location than the first portion; and combining the first and second portions to provide the non-browser input (Hudetz, col. 7, line 1 – col. 8, line 46).

4. As to claim 4, Hudetz-Browning teaches a method wherein the step of providing the second portion comprises retrieving the second portion for a location on the network by accessing the network from the user's computer to an intermediate location on the; retrieving the second portion therefrom and transferring the retrieved second portion back to the user's computer for use by the step of combining network (Hudetz, col. 7, line 1 – col. 8, line 46).

Art Unit: 2152

5. As to claim 5, Hudetz-Browning teaches reading a barcode (col. 11, line 40 – col. 12, line 10).

6. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 1-5 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection. The applicant argued in substance that the prior art of record does not teach “launching” a web browser in response to a non-browser input. The new grounds of rejection teaches this feature.
